

Resolution.

The waves oppose the cliffs with daily force, And fall resisted back along their course. My soul opposes fate with daily will.

And falls resisted back; defeated still; With gathered strength, returning, like the waves, To wrest the dear dominion that it craves, The cliffs are stone, and stone will wear away; Spirit shall rule, and fate itself obey. RUBY ARCHER.

Patent Leather Sailors.

There are so many new wrinkles in millinery that it is impossible to cover them all in one paragraph. Artificial fruit is being used now in trimming hats. Cherries are much in vogue on the other side, and when used as a trimming on hats of deep yellow straw are very smart. They are frequently combined with black velvet bows. White guil wings make a pretty trimming for white sailor hats and white and black combinations in millinery grow hourly in favor. The sailor hat of white patent leather is being worn in New York. In fine weather a scarf of white chiffon is twisted about the crown and a bunch of flowers is laid carelessly on the brim. When the weather is threatening a white surah sash takes the place of the chiffon and a white or black wing is caught at one side. An odd little contrivance in millinery is of black tulle run with gold thread. The tulle is arranged in a great fluffy circle and in the center there is a space for the coffure. From the back fail two wide gauze streamers that may be wound round and round the throat and caught with a great cluster of red roses or a bunch of violets beneath the chin. The Invaluable Lemon.

If you do not fully know the value of lemons in that hot weather diet I recommended listen and learn. They are a better medicine than all the patent preparations on the market. A teaspoonful of lemon juice in a small cup of black coffee will drive away an attack of bilious headache, and if lemons are freely used headaches of this kind will be unknown. A slice of lemon rubbed on the temples and back of the neck is a remedy for another kind of headache, and lemon juice and water is an excellent tooth wash. A lemon should be on every woman's toilet table, for, rubbed on the hands, face and neck at night, will not only whiten, but soften, the skin. A paster made of magnesia and lemon juice applied to the face and hands on lying down for a fifteen minutes' rest will bleach the skin, and for stained fingers and nails it has no equal. A teaspoonful of lemon juice in a cup of warm soft water is invaluable, as every manicure knows, for each uses it to loosen the cutilele from the finger nails and remove discolorations. stay at the Iron Springs hotel.

From the Boston Herald. It is difficult to believe that the once beautiful Princess Dolgourika-Jouriewski, morganatic widow of Czar Alexander II., has lost all her good looks and become has lost all her good looks and become a "dreadfully ill-dressed woman, with bloated face, spectacles and a most prominent nose." Ten or twelve years age she was as sumptuous and spiendid a creature as American eyes have looked upon. A high-bred little girl, with masses of flaxen hair, was with her, and a footman such as never was stood at the door, meanwhile eyeing a can that was trying to get into the shop. The party was all so imposing, the lady especially so magnificent, that the cashier, who seemed to know her, was politely asked if madame happened to be a "crowned head." The woman laughed and replied, "Not at all! But she came near one." Then the obliging cashier told me it was the Princess Jouriewski, and the sweet thoroughbred girl was a caar's daughter. FLORISTS MADE A MISTAKE. another Bridal Couple Enjoyed the Benefit of Their Elaborate Decorations. Accidents and mistakes are always liable to happen at a wedding, and many brides and grooms have learned to their cost that t pays to supervise the arrangements for heir marriage themselves. An amusing their marriage themselves. An amusing thing happened to a very smart wedding not far from London recently. The bride's parents sent to some fashionable city florists to decorate the chancel of the parish church, but when the bridal party arrived not a flower was visible, and the place was as bare as a barn. Indignation and surprise consumed all goncerned, and violent inquiries were sent by wire to the fashionable florists to learn why they had failed to obey instructions. The answer came in due time with the bill, and on infashionable florists to learn why they had failed to obey instructions. The answer came in due time with the bill, and on inquiry it was discovered that the smart 2 o'clock nuptials had been preceded by another earlier wedding. The florists had arrived just before and profusely adorned the church, but as soon as the ceremony was over, supposing it to be "the" wedding for which they were engaged, they carefully removed all the decorations and bundled them off to town! The moral of which is: Don't leave bridal arrangements to hirelings.

There is an exquisite charm about a neatly dressed woman. She does not wear her hair twisted up carelessly, as if just about to fall over her shoulders. Her gloves are not ripped at the seams, nor any buttons missing from her boots. Her veil does not reveal a hole over her chin, nor does the binding of her skirt show ragged in places. Not many women show their tidiness in all these little details, but it is a pleasure to meet the girl or woman who is, to use a slang term, "well groomed." The cloth gown of such a woman its her without a crease, and there is neither speck nor spot on it. Her linen collar and cuffs are snowy white and remain properly fixed in their places. Her gloves do not wrinkle, but button smoothly over her wrists, her shoes are kept clean and polished. Her bonnet or hat is pinned on straight, and her hair is neatness itself. She is the picture of delicate finish and wholesome order. Would that we could come across her somewhat oftener.

classes—will no doubt feel duly grateful to Anatole France and Francisque Sarcey, who agree in contending that the conventional rules of spelling are arbitrary and tyrannical, and that people should just be left alone to choose any combination of letters which may seem to them to indicate the word that they wish to produce. It was Sam Weller who maintained, in the course of the immortal breach-of-promise trial, that the orthography of a word 'depends upon the taste and fancy of a For the Tea Tables.

The easiest way to manage the tea table for an afternoon at home is to have the tea made in a fairly large china tea pot. putting the tea leaves in bags that may be removed at the proper time. This pot of tea may be made as strong as is consistent with good flavor and hygienic brew, and on the tea table should be an urn of hot water kept at the boiling point by an alcohol lamp, this to be used for diluting purposes for such as prefer the beverage weak. The tea balls are dainty and pretty, but their constant use interferes with the reception duties of the hostess. In large establishments, where plenty of maids are at hand, there may be a fresh brew for each caller and for each cup, but the method suggested secures the greatest economy of time and service. trial, that the orthography of a word "depends upon the taste and fancy of a speller"; but it is a little curious to find two distinguished men of letters indorsing his view of the matter. Whether the toleration of any such unlimited license would not tend to produce a confusion which would be a far worse evil than any occasioned by the existing uniformity is a question as to which there may be more than one opinion. But the objections to this go-as-you-please method on etymological grounds are surely weighty enough to secure its condemnation.

Twenty-five and thirty will masquerade as "sweet sixteen" and "bread and butter fourteen" this summer. You will hardly credit this, but it is nevertheless the fact. In "pigtails," "Gretchen braids," whatever you please to call them, but sure enough braids—two of them, falling down the back—the modern girl is to appear from now on in the country, in the mornings. Of course after lunch she will put up her hair in the most proper and precise coffure. her hair in the most property of the conflure.

What is accomplished by wearing the hair in long braids is that it is given what is known as a "rest." Hair experts have now developed the theory that a good rest about once a year is what a head of hair results.

Sweet-Grass Bags.

The young woman who desires to embalm her purple and fine linen can find nothing more deliciously refreshing and lasting than a sweet-grass bag, so says the New York Tribune. At this season the grass is in bloom, and it must be gathered now, before it grows rank. The tender tops only of the stalks should be picked, including the blossom and leaves. Unlike rose leaves, sweet-grass should not be allowed to dry, but the moisture should be left in it, and it should be sewed up immediately in little bags of net or crinoline lining, but with a fine mesh, so that the dried fragments cannot sift through, and after lying a day or so among handker-chiefs and underclothing, especially if the weather is at all damp, the articles will emit a most delightful odor.

The "Linen Chest Catalogue" will prove a welcome gift to mistresses of well ordered homes. If fancy work is ever sensible, this is a bright and shining example. Currant ice made of the fresh fruit is a beautiful color, and is frequently more acceptable than the creams. To prepare it, soak a tablespoonful of gelatin half an hour in enough cold water to cover it. Pour over it a half pint of bolling water, add one pint of granulated sugar, one of currant juice, one of cold water and the juice of one lemon. Freeze and pack.

If You Would Marry, Lay Claim to Twenty-five Years at Once.

From Black and White.

From Black and White.

We believe Beaconsfield once said that there are three kinds of lies: (1) lies, (2) damned lies, and (3) statistics, and this is a saying which one should remember in tabulating men and women. As Sam Slick remarked: "There's a great deal of human tabulating man," and man refuses to prenature about man," and man refuses to reduce himself to a more unit.

Yet if there is one field in which statistics about human life are permissible, it surely is the field of marriage and courting. For

Yet if there is one field in which statistics about human life are permissible, it surely is the field of marriage and courting. For there we are all alike—we all run after a pretty face or a handsome ligure, all without exception.

Hence it is that we can unreservedly praise the immense recarch and labor of J. Hoit Schooling, who has devoted an almost German perseverance to the analysis of bachelors and widows, and has given us a work that shall be a possession forever, "A Woman's Chance of Marriage.

Let us take some of his figures and show how marvelous is the truth he has unfolded. Thus, of spinsters aged 2 to 24, one in thirteen marries, while of spinsters aged 25 to 25, one in eight marries.

From this two observations and recommendations may be drawn: Eather let your unmarried girl of 3) flirt gayly till she is 25-for then she will have 60 per cent more chance of getting married—or let her publish herself as 25 and get the extra chance at once.

This latter advice, though somewhat more immoral, is really most likely to be successful; for the man who sees the woman of apparently 25 so well preserved and fresh will consider her beauty no passing bloom of youth, but truly an abiding splendor.

Or, there is another thing that she might do. Of widows aged 20 to 24 one marries out of every eight. Let, then, the spinster of similar age, simply become a widow and she will at once have 60 per cent more chance of being married.

As Mr. Schooling has shown that widows are always the favorites, we may make this advice apply to all spinsters, and recommend them simply to become widows if they want to be sure of their husbands.

According to this brochure, widowers of a certain age must, indeed, be fascinating creatures. Thus, a widower aged as to 64, the only age at which a widower is worth marrying, is equal to 5.8 bachelors from a marrying point of view. If, then, a woman is courted by one widower of this age and 5.8 bachelors, better make for the widower at once, as there is 16 per cent more chance of his offer be

WAR HELPED WOMEN.

Loss of a Million Men in Civil Conflict Made a Way for Women in

From the New Orleans Picayune. One of the most interesting as well as important factors in the labor problem today is the employment of women in the various departments of labor once reserved for men, and the competition of women for men, and the competition of women with men in the struggle for life.

There were some 22,000,000 persons of both sexes engaged in gair'il pursuits of all sorts in 1890. Of these about 4,000,000 were females and 18,000,000 males. There were, according to the same census, about 13,000,000 families in the United States. In 1860 there were about 10,000,000 workers of both sexes, and of these one-twentieth, or 500,000, were females. These were engaged chiefly in clothing factories, cotton mills and in shoe binding, and they were found almost wholly in the New England states, whose men had gone away to sea or to the new lands of the West and left their women dependent. In the West and in the South a woman seidom went away from home to work, or, if so, they were occupied with household duties in families. After the civil war the situation was vastly changed. A million men lost their lives or were so disabled as to be incapacitated to support themselves. The South suffered more than any other section, and many women were left self-dependent. It was a new thing to see white women in the Southern states start out to seek work in avenues that had been previously closed to women. They could not take domestic service, because such places were monopolized by the negroes who had been brought up to that sort of work. The posts of teaching the young did not afford places for all who were forced to work, and thus the white women of the South emulated their sisters of the North and West in seeking the means of earning a livelihood in every honorable work within their capacity, and, however much the necessity for such a state of things is regretted, it must be recognized all the same.

It is not only unmanly, but it is outrageously unjust for men to complain that women are driving them out of employment. There are 12,000,000 hends of families in the United States. Some of these are widows, but the greatest number are men. There are men enough in the country to support all the women if they would be at home. The worst feature i with men in the struggle for life.

There were some 22,000,000 persons of both
